

Got WaterSense?

Builders and homeowners alike are searching for ways in which they can conserve water while lowering the amount of money spent on utilities each month. Installing products in your home that have earned the EPA's WaterSense label will lead to saving hundreds of gallons of water each year, allow more water to remain in local reservoirs, and lower the amount of energy used to pump and heat water throughout your house. Some products that can be swapped with green alternatives include faucets, toilets, and showerheads. There are also geothermal products that can be installed inside pipelines that help with water efficiency. By saving water via these eco-friendly products, you are helping to produce a thriving environment and saving water for future generations. Shop for a builder with experience in water conservation or ask your builder about using WaterSense-approved products.

Diagnosis: Energy

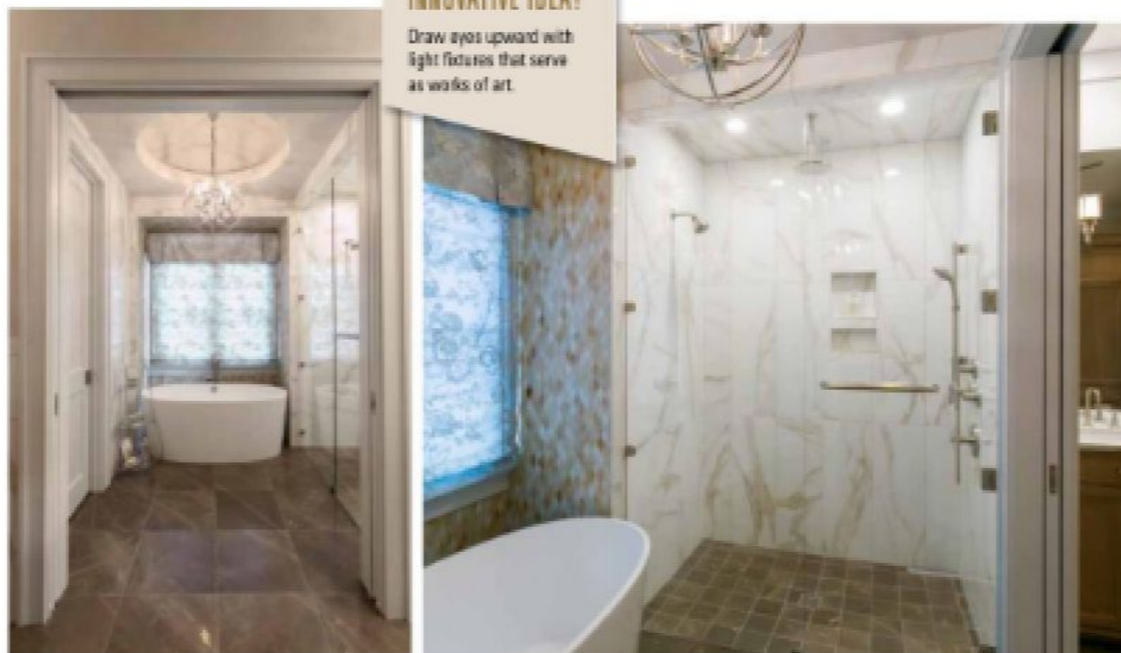

In the Lowcountry, air conditioning systems work overtime to keep everyone cool in the scorching summer months, and each year, energy costs increase. To help reduce the energy used and your bill, an energy audit can be performed on your home to pinpoint where the majority of kilowatt-hours are used. Most auditors will inspect every room in the house as well as examine past energy bills to identify the problem. You will also receive recommendations about how to make other areas of your home more energy efficient for the future. Not to mention, energy audits provide solutions that will improve indoor air quality, increase your home's resale value, and much more.

The Tides Adds New Luxury Condominiums

The Tides, a high-end condominium community in Mt. Pleasant, is in the initial stages of adding a fourth tower to the waterfront property near the Ravenel Bridge. The project includes plans to add 55 more residences of one to four bedroom floor plans. Especially newsworthy is Jay Valk's participation in the project. The owner of Classic Kitchens of Charleston is beyond excited to have the opportunity to work with The Tides to provide future residents with luxury kitchens that complement the entire project.

Rally for MUSC's Children's Hospital

During the month of February, the team at Sea Island Builders rallied behind the MUSC Children's Hospital as part of the iHeartRadio Miracle Maker campaign. Their initial donation of $1,200 was just the start of their relationship with MUSC. For the whole month, every Facebook like that they generated prompted the company to send another dollar to the children's hospital. Other local businesses, magazines, radio stations, and papers joined in the effort to spread the word about the fundraising initiative.
